Still looking up

Around him, everything is broken. Walls that were homes, streets that were neighbourhoods. And yet the boy has found a telescope, a notebook, and a patch of clear sky, and he is carefully mapping the stars as if tomorrow were guaranteed.

I have met many families in Canada who started from rubble of one kind or another: a lost job, a war, a divorce, a new country with no credit history. The ones who made it did not wait for the ground to be perfect. They looked up, wrote down a plan, and kept going. Hope is not a feeling. It is a plan you keep writing.
