She carries the water

The land is dry and cracked, but she has found water. She kneels at the old stone well and fills what she can, knowing that tonight a whole family will drink because she walked here today. She will not tell anyone it was hard.

In so many homes, a mother is the one quietly carrying the water: the schedules, the savings, the worry. This Mother's Day, the best gift may be making sure her load is protected: a plan if income stops, a home that is secure, and a family that knows how much she carries.
