Short story by Vikas Sharma

Made by hand, made to last

The carver does not rush. Each cut is small, and a wrong one cannot be undone, so he measures twice and works slowly. The shavings pile up around his hands, and the pattern appears one line at a time.

Many fathers build a family the same way: patiently, with their hands, with very little praise. This Father's Day, think about what is being built in your home that will outlast you. A house paid down, a family protected, a child who learned from watching you that good things take time.
