The long walk to school

The road is muddy, the fields are wide, and the school is still far away. The girl holds her notebook close and keeps walking. For her, this walk is not a chore. It is the road out.

Every September I think about how much a single education can change a family's story. Many of our parents walked long roads so we could sit in classrooms here. As our children go back to school, it is worth asking: what are we doing today to make their road a little shorter than ours?
