Pass the baton

A relay is never won by one runner. Each one runs hard for a short stretch, and then everything depends on a single moment: the hand-off. Drop the baton, and all that speed means nothing.

Families work the same way. Our parents ran their leg, often with far less than we have. Now we run ours. The question is not only how fast we go, but what we place in the next hand: a home, a will, protection, a little knowledge about money. The hand-off is the part most people forget to practise.
