Tend the small things

Nobody plants a garden in one afternoon and walks away. The woman kneeling in the dirt is not doing anything dramatic. She pulls one weed, then another, loosens the soil, and comes back next week to do it again. The blossoms are the reward for all the quiet Saturdays nobody photographed.

A home and a financial life are gardens too. Most of the work is small and repeated: a budget checked, a small extra payment, a renewal date noted. Spring is a good season to kneel down and tend the small things before they grow into big ones.
