Short story by Vikas Sharma

Paint what you want to see

The painter stands before a canvas full of gold and orange. Out of the colour, domes and arches slowly appear, a city that exists first in his mind, then on the canvas, and one day perhaps in the world.

So many of us came to Canada the same way, holding a picture of a home before we had a key. Canada Day is a good moment to remember that the picture comes first. Write down the home you want and the life around it. Then, one brush stroke at a time, start painting it into being.
